

Negley D. Cochran Collection Biographical Sketch

Negley Dakin Cochran was born on December 20, 1863 in Martin's Ferry, Ohio. He was named after Civil War leader, General James Negley, whom his father Robert H. Cochran had served under during the war. Negley graduated from Wheeling, West Virginia public school in 1879 and later attended the Lindsey Institute for Boys. In 1883, he graduated from the University of Michigan and worked for his father, who was counsel for the Wheeling and Lake Erie Railroad. He quickly removed himself from this career path, as he did not want to end up as a lawyer. Negley found himself soliciting for the Toledo Commercial and due to his aggressiveness became a reporter for the Toledo Blade. In 1886, Cochran married his sweetheart Nettie Moore. During his marriage to Nettie, they raised three sons, Donald, Harold, and Frank Cochran, and four daughters, Marie Hartough, Ruth Jones, Dorothy Boardman, and Martha Flynn.

In 1890, Cochran became the managing editor of the Toledo Commercial and moved on to editor of the Toledo Bee. He purchased the Toledo Bee for $15,000, maintaining his role of editor even after the Bee merged with the Toledo News after a buyout from the Scripps-McRae syndicate in 1903. Cochran upheld a close personal and professional relationship with E.W. Scripps, the owner of the Scripps-McRae newspaper syndicate and newspaper giant on a national level. Their political and journalistic correspondence over the years showed the closeness and the respect that they had for each other's decisions.

In the early years of the twentieth century, Negley Cochran's career and power reached its zenith. His editorials were highly praised throughout the country as his thought provoking commentaries on social reform and legislation were featured in newspapers across the nation. He had several powerful allies in his career in addition to his mentor E.W. Scripps. He became close friends with Lincoln Steffens, Clarence Darrow, and Carl Sandburg, all crusaders against social injustice that aided him in his political and journalistic endeavors. Cochran soon became a mentor himself as he encouraged men who gained national prominence in the news field, such as Sidney Smith, Walter Allman, and Harold Tulbert.

During this progressive era, Cochran was considered to be a powerful political editor who could sway the public to vote for his candidates of interest. Both local and national candidates asked for backing by Cochran's Toledo News-Bee and other Scripps-McRae (later Howard) newspapers. Most often siding with the Democratic Party, Cochran backed Samuel Jones for mayor of Toledo and later groomed Brand Whitlock as his successor. Both candidates followed the principles of social justice as opposed to Walter F. Brown's Republican political machine that had attempted to take hold in Toledo.

Strong political views and editorials enhanced Cochran's reputation as a force to be reckoned with. Cochran disliked how local judges and politicians were controlled by big business and no longer catered to the interests of the people. An example of this was exhibited in his scorn for Henry L. Doherty, who was trying to get the streetcar franchise to become his personal transit monopoly in Toledo. The street railway controversy ensued in Toledo as a result of "supposed" fixed fares, strikes, and company interests. Cochran denounced District Federal Judge John M. Killits during this affair as he held Cochran in contempt of court. This was because Cochran stated editorially that the judge who was to hear the Rail Light case was a "human being." This in turn was interpreted by Killits as libel, contempt of court, and an obstruction of justice. Cochran wrote further editorials against Killits, raging a war for freedom of speech and press. For years after, he wrote scathing editorials against certain political leaders, announcing his political views and making big businesses writhe.

As for politics on a national scale, Cochran supported presidential candidates such as Theodore Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson, and Herbert Hoover for their idealism and humanitarianism. He denounced the Republican political machine for not supporting the interests of the public, thus backing Governor Cox, rather than Harding in the presidential election of 1920.

After 1913, Cochran's influence began to decline due to several factors. His rows with big businesses lost advertising and subscriptions to the News-Bee and the Toledo Blade was edging in as Toledo's top newspaper. However, E.W. Scripps saw much potential in his colleague and sent Cochran to Chicago to run an experimental "adless" newspaper called the Day Book. The idea of this newspaper was to have no dependence on advertisers, so the editors could attack certain parties as a result of their own interests without the fear of losing revenue. This tabloid venture sold for a penny and was a success through increased circulation. However, in 1917, WWI ended publication of the Day Book due to fluctuations in newsprint prices. Scripps sent Cochran to Washington D.C. to write editorials for the Scripps-McRae chain of news pertaining to the war. He was then elected to the Scripps-Howard Central Editorial Board where he had a major influence on what would be put into the papers.

After retiring as editor from the Toledo News-Bee in 1922, Negley Cochran became a feature writer in the Scripps-Howard Washington division. A few of the prominent subjects that Cochran latched onto in his writings included his distaste for the Ku Klux Klan, fundamentalism/anti-evolutionism, and prohibition. He felt that all of these issues were interrelated and inseparable in context as they all tried to dictate public morals. Cochran attended the Scopes Trial in Tennessee in 1925, writing how fundamentalism was getting out of hand, as the public became more closed-minded in their beliefs. He sympathized with their freedom of religion, but he sided with his old friend, lawyer Clarence Darrow and felt that this particular public was ignorant of science. Cochran did not care for the Anti-Saloon League, nor the saloon owners as they imposed their views upon an eager public. He tried to back legislation for the Volstead Act so that there might be temperance, but not outright prohibition. Negley Cochran felt that the only way to fight these inherent evils was through education and politics, which would lead people away from bigotry and ignorance.

Even after his official retirement from active work on the Scripps-Howard Board in 1938, Cochran still wrote about his opinions of politics and important social issues until his death. Soon after moving back to Toledo and claiming residence at the Secor Hotel, he became prone to prolonged illness. He died in his home on April 13, 1941, just two days after the death of his wife Nettie. In his seventy-seven years of life, Negley Cochran became one of the most respected and beloved newspapermen of his era, remembered in immortality through his writings.

Negley D. Cochran Collection

Scope and Content Notes

This material consists of letters of correspondence between news editor Negley D. Cochran and various individuals throughout his life and news career. Collected and saved by Cochran's daughter Marie Hartough, this correspondence collection is contained in four boxes. This collection of letters and occasional newspaper clippings spanning the years 1883-1940, holds great significance to not only the city of Toledo, but to the nation.

These letters reflect mainly the political opinions of Cochran, which were often considered by several politicians at the national, state, and local levels. Other important issues that have been discussed in the correspondence includes the Rail Light Streetcar controversy in Toledo, the Judge Killits contempt case against the Toledo News-Bee, thoughts on labor struggles, World War I, the Chicago Day Book, the Scopes Trial on evolution, news and editorial policies of the News-Bee, and expressed hatred of the Ku Klux Klan, fundamentalist religion, and the Anti-Saloon League. Many of these topics appeared in Toledo, or involved Negley Cochran. They were reported in both the local and national news, bringing Toledo's attributes to national attention.

Included in this collection is the correspondence between Cochran and newspaper tycoon E.W. Scripps. During the World War I era, Cochran was located in Washington D.C., relaying news reports which involved much correspondence with Theodore Roosevelt, Samuel M. Jones, Brand Whitlock, Governor James Cox of Ohio, and several other political figures including senators and judges. Cochran also corresponded with many prominent individuals in Toledo history. Letters from Federal Judge Killits, Ward Canaday, John M. Willys, and Carl Spitzer are among the business and public leaders that Cochran came into contact. Meeting these individuals was an immense perk of being editor of one of the nation's popular newspapers. It also afforded Cochran close relationships with reporter Carl Sandburg and lawyer Clarence Darrow, whose correspondence with Cochran has been noted on a national and local scale.

This vast collection of correspondence is mainly political and journalistic in nature, but there are many personal topics that relate to the life of Cochran and the numerous relationships he had with significant individuals. The material relates to Cochran's career and the social and political issues that arose during his lifetime. Scholars of local history, journalism, politics, or those interested in the World War I era through the depression would benefit greatly from this collection of correspondence.
